

It is known that, in quantum mechanical systems, there is a one-to-one correspondence between CP (completely positive) instruments and statistical equivalence classes of measuring processes. I recently found a condition that a CP instrument corresponds to a measuring process in general quantum systems. This condition and a structure theory of von Neumann algebras enable us to understand the set of CP instruments. We then consider generalized quantum measurements in DHR-DR theory.